Background

A leading payment solutions provider experienced challenges managing regulatory compliance amid significant company growth and expansion. The company considered solutions like Gryphon ONE for Compliance too expensive and unnecessarily restrictive, limiting their revenue potential by suppressing outreach.

Instead, the company chose to develop an in-house system that would manage compliance using regulatory guides and semi-frequent scrubbing processes. This led to significant oversight issues, resulting in compliance violations that would later impact the company's sales reach.

Challenge

The company's initial problems coincided with a period of rapid growth, driven by massive outreach campaigns to contacts sourced from multiple leading platforms. Although these leads were scrubbed upon receipt, the data was not subjected to subsequent compliance protocols. As the data was aggregated and fed into follow-on campaigns, TCPA violations began seeping in, culminating in a multi-million-dollar class action lawsuit.

Coming out of the 2-year legal battle, the payment processor took an ultra-conservative approach to compliance adherence, locking down 35% of their database to avoid further legal issues. However, data projections showed this approach would eventually reduce their total contactable universe by more than 135% over the next five years, severely impacting the company's outreach capabilities.

The company needed a solution for effectively mitigating compliance risk, while legally maximizing sales reach.

Solution

Guided by outside counsel, it was clear that Gryphon ONE for Compliance was the only solution that could meet the company's rigorous requirements, including capabilities for mitigating risk while maximizing opportunity potential. Key capabilities included:

- Real-time contact compliance that proactively detects and prevents non-compliant communications, helping the payment solutions leader avoid further fines and legal actions related to DNC and TCPA violations.
- Expiration of eligible opt-out records in accordance with federal and state guidelines to legally renew sales outreach.
- Reassigned Numbers Database (RND) certifications, enabling the organization to recover reassigned wireless numbers from their opt-out list.

Results

Gryphon ONE for Compliance enabled the payment processing provider to mitigate contact compliance risk, while enhancing their outreach effectiveness by recapturing 15% of their contact base:

- Recovered valid lead numbers: 46% (+9 million)
- Opt-outs recovered from Reassigned Numbers Database: 5% (+150,000)
- Recaptured revenue: $100+ million
